PHILADELPHIA, Oct. 6.—Fifteen big league magnates—and maybe a sixteenth, too—knelt in prayer through the night and into today, pleading that the A's be given the power to snare this afternoon's ruckus.

It means much to the magnating boys—$150,000 to $300,000—if the now sad and forlorn hirelings of Connie Mack can arouse themselves from lethargy sufficiently to bang the Cardinals into a defeat that would make it 2-all and force the series into six and possibly seven games.

Waiting eastward from the banks of the Mississippi, were kindred prayers offered by railroads, hotel keepers and others who profit by banner attractions that draw mobs; prayers for an Athletic triumph that would guarantee the return of the thousands of tourists who fluttered around last week in the ozone of "Ol Saint Lou'."

Of course, leading in the counter-entreaties was Connie Mack, the man who wants to win today. Tomorrow and later on in the week so that his dreams of three straight world championships can come true.

Chorus with him were fourteen other club owners, as well as a couple of league presidents, because all of them would benefit from the cash that would be derived from a sixth and seventh struggle.

As to Sam Breadon, owner of the Cards, well, nobody really can tell about Sam. He wasn't with the others at the "services"; maybe he was praying in solitude. Maybe he wasn't praying at all. Perhaps he is burning with a yearning that the Cards grab the next two—and the title—although no one can imagine that Sam would be fearfully anguished if they did have to play six or seven times before a world's championship banner can be lifted on the Cardinals' flagpole.

The spirit of the times, y'no. It'll be Bill Hallahan, the portside kid, who whitewashed the A's the other afternoon, against George Earnshaw, who was flung for a loss; it will be the Cardinals, on a hitting rampage, opposed to a group of gents who have been able to pound out only five hits in eighteen innings; it will be the dashing and dauntless St. Louisans in combat with the depressed and distressed Philadelphians.

The outlook for the A's is almost as dismal as it was the time that the

SCOUT FUND DRIVE WILL BE INTENSIVE AFTER NEXT FRIDAY

Judge Keller Invites 300
Workers to Attend
Dinner

TO BOOST CAMPAIGN

Men Prominent in County
Endorse the Boy Scout Movement

The intensive phase of the County-wide Boy Scout Campaign for a $50,000 fund to provide extension as well as supervision for the scout activities for the next two years will begin with a dinner at the Salem Reformed Church, Doylestown, Friday evening, at 7 o'clock. Judge Hiram H. Keller, general chairman, is inviting the 300 workers to dine with him at that time, for the purpose of formulating plans to carry forward the campaign in a successful way. The county has been divided into six areas, and are under the following general chairmen: District A, M. J. Hill; District B, E. H. Lovett; District C, Arthur M. Eastburn; District D, Mark Thatcher; District E, C. Wilson Roberts; District F, John R. Moore.

Each separate town is being headed by a local chairman. Judge Keller, in commenting on the campaign, stated: "It is planned to give each resident of the county an opportunity to subscribe to this great and growing work. It is hoped that citizens will give freely when seen, so as not to take up the valuable time of the workers." Judge Keller also stated that "Here under the jurisdiction of Bucks County Council, we now have 1,447 boys enrolled in troops, as Sea Scouts, or in Cub Packs. The scouting program for these must go forward if we are effectively to combat the forces of radicalism and lawlessness now so active. Two years ago our citizens provided the funds necessary to carry on until the close of the present year, but now we must again look toward the future. An assurance of financial security for this program during the next two years is essential."

Interesting endorsements of the scout movement have recently been received by our publicity chairman, Oscar O. Bean, from Congressman Henry W. Watson: "The age of wealth in which we now live contributes to ease and comfort, also entices energy, the power of human civilization. The youth of today seemingly meets with the spirit to the age. In order that the coming generation may have greater vigor of mind and body to recognize responsibility to their country, they should be trained mentally and physically. Camp life brings one nearer to nature, teaches self-reliance, improves the health and discipline of the mind. Boy Scouts is an institution which might well be supported by every citizen. A nation cannot be greater than its people. Boys of today will tomorrow weaken or strengthen our Republic. May the Boy Scouts continue in their work and may the teaching of character be one of their outstanding features."

Chief Burgess C. L. Anderson, of Bristol, says: "Without any question the Boy Scout movement should be encouraged."

SWEET MELANCHOLY

The melancholy days are come,
The saddest of the year,
Of wailing winds, and naked woods,
And meadows brown and sore.

Not everyone has felt about autumn as Bryant did. John Logan in one of his odes found autumn "congenial" and "The Sabbath of the year." To Tennyson autumn fields were "happy" and Sir William Watson was so charmed by this season that he implored of it, "O be less beautiful, or be less brief!"

Whether melancholy or sad or congenial, or happy or beautiful, the autumn days are here and the year is dying fast. These are the invigorating days and enchanting nights when it is not only the young man's fancy that turns to thoughts of log fires, apples ripe from the orchard, pumpkin pie, cider, nuts and other delights from autumn's fruitful harvests. Are these not compensations enough for the loss of summer?

Truly, the fall is "that un-bodied thing." There is something occult, bewitching and soul-stirring about it that appeals to the senses. Melancholy, perhaps, but a sweet melancholy.

Police have picked up a wanderer who talks without saying anything intelligible. What a man to write a party platform!

If you think people can't go wild about a thing unless they know something about it, look at the Einstein theory and the stock market.

Cecil Trufax Sillson, the Puritan sage, has made a great philosophical discovery to wit: Any man who does not agree with him is a degenerate.

Cora Pinchot, wife of Pennsylvania's governor, says she will sink or swim with the Eighteenth Amendment. It is hard to visualize Cora as a bathing beauty.

DEATH.... entered the room with her!

The Law was on her husband's side—that Latin "Judas" who claimed her child. She came to plead for mercy—armed—prepared to kill, but then—FATE stepped in to play an amazing role in this great true-life story of war, infidelity, and mother love!

"I LOVED that man, Paul-Louis," this confessional woman writes. "I loved him with all the yielding devotion of a country girl from Illinois. We met and married in France during the war, and gladly did I sacrifice all—my citizenship and property—to let him possess me."

"But Paul-Louis was French—a gentleman of a foreign land with a foreign code of morals—and soon his faithless kisses fouled my lips, his honeyed phrases sickened my soul."

"How could I—how could any woman endure such torture and still go on? I had to smuggle our child out of France, because The Law gave it to him. We sailed to New York. He followed and had The Law take my baby from me!"

"Frenzied—I had almost given up the battle—when a murderous thought blazed through my mind. At any cost, I'd save my precious baby boy from being brought up to the degrading morals of his faithless father. And so I rushed madly to Paul-Louis' apartment—and it was on that terrifying afternoon—that—I—"

Here, into this thundering climax, Fate hurled a bolt that shook the very depths of this suffering woman's soul. If you love all that is clean and fine in life—if ever you have been tortured with the helpless thought of a loved one's unfaithfulness, here is a tremendous true-life story that will grip you through every starkly-told detail. The story is called HER LORD AND MASTER. You will find it complete in November TRUE STORY MAGAZINE—just as it flowed from the pulsing pen of this brave woman who fought for the Right. Frank Severn, after an attempt to retrieve the lost Czarina Rubies for the girl to whom they rightfully belong, returns to England from Russia in desperate fear. His friend, Jim Wynter and his lawyer Felix Sant, rush to Severn's remote country place to help him, but Severn already has been kidnapped and carried away in an automobile in the night.

Wynter returns to London and, to fulfill a promise, attends a roulette party.

NOW GO ON

CHAPTER VIII

"I've had something on my mind every time, Jim," Milly told him. "All the big numbers are coming up tonight. There you are—29. That's another win," she added breathlessly, as the slowing ivory ball dropped into its number slot.

A big, florid man, whose name was Malin, rose disgustedly from his chair.

"I don't believe the bally wheel's true," he murmured to Wynter. "Oh, not Hildren's fault—I don't mean that, but I'll swear the infernal thing's warped. I've backed 23 every time tonight and it hasn't come up once."

PERVENSITY

Malin looked in a decidedly evil humor. The younger man grinned unsympathetically. He had no particular use for bad losers. Besides Malin had more money than was good for him. Time he learned to be a sportsman and lose decently.

Again the ball was spun. Then: "Twenty-three—rouge—passe," announced Hildren.

"Well, I'm damned!" broke out Lester Malin explosively. "If that isn't the limit. The first time I don't stake 23 turns up."

But Jim Wynter hardly heard. He was staring as if startled at a girl in black and mauve whose face had flashed out unexpectedly from among the little crowd 'round the roulette table—and it was not her arresting beauty alone that drew his sudden, intent gaze, though she was easily the most striking looking woman there, vivid with a dark, delicate loveliness that somehow suggested an un-English strain in her blood. She seemed to hold aloof from the general talk and laughter and there was a strained look in her face, as though she were not playing entirely for the fun of the thing.

Her luck had been clean out, spin after spin.

That girl whom he had last seen more than two years ago in New York, when her name had flashed out in a glitter of white light from the facade of a great pleasure palace on Broadway... how strange the coincidence that had brought them together again tonight, so closely following upon Severn's disappearance—Katharine Faring!

The sight of this girl's face, that he had last seen some 3,000 odd miles away from England, had brought Jim Wynter up with a quick, eager thrill. How amazing a chance that he should have run across Katharine Faring now, so closely upon that bewildering mystery about the man to whom he owed their introduction in New York more than two years ago.

Once, as if suddenly conscious of his gaze, the girl glanced up the table in Wynter's direction. For a moment her eyes seemed to linger arrested, and a faintly puzzled look crept into them as if something in the man's face struck her as vaguely familiar. Then, almost at once, the game absorbed her again.

She was having no luck at all, as Wynter saw as he stood watching the play. There was more than the hint of a strained look in her face, as if the game had gone steadily against her from the moment she had sat down at the table. Four times running she backed red and each time, with monotonous persistence, black came up. Then, as if on a sudden impulse, she increased her stake from ten shillings to a pound, still backing red, and once again her stake was swept away.

DESPERATION

The little heap of paper money on the table by her side had melted away. From her brocade handbag the girl drew out very slowly a tinywad of notes. She bit her lip as once again her stake was raked in with casual cheerfulness by Hildren.

Despite her efforts at composure her face could not hide that deepening strained look. In the eyes of some of the players greed flared like a naphtha lamp; but it was not that in hers—something more like sheer desperation, as it seemed to Wynter. And yet how could the winning or losing of a handful of Treasury notes really matter to that girl he remembered on the crest of the wave, one of fortune's favorites?

In Jim Wynter's mind was a sudden picture of a night of more than two years ago when Frank Severn had dragged him off to a great concert hall on Broadway—that of a girl with a violin who had played "Chanson Triste," the magic of her fingers setting free cascades of dancing silver notes that seemed to weave into their pattern of matchless melody joy and sorrow, hopes and dreams, so exquisite in their tenderness and feeling, so near to tears, that for moments after the last note had quivered into silence it was as though the great hushed house still held its breath.

The New York press had been full of this girl violinist, Russian on her mother's side, who had flashed into fame almost in a night. And not only her talents, her beauty... behind her triumphant progress was a story—strange and dramatic enough to intrigue public interest still more in the personality of the rising star. After knowing that poignant story Wynter had marveled less at the depth of feeling expressed in Katharine Faring's playing of "Chanson Triste."

When Severn had introduced them Wynter had half expected a certain disillusionment; the few celebrities he had met had proved distinctly disillusioning at close quarters. He need not have been afraid. Off the platform one would not have known that she was a celebrity—gay, charming, natural, so utterly unspoiled by success.

HURT

It was not easy to reconcile that memory picture with the figure in mauve and black bending with absorbed eyes over the roulette table. A

Sock vs. Social Lure

By HARDIN BURNLEY

HOPE is not dead that Gene Tunney will return to the ring from which he retired as world's champion three years ago to marry into society quite happily and enjoy the life of a gentleman of leisure. But that spark of hope is faint, even though it is being scientifically fanned by promoter Damon Runyon of New York's famous Milk Fund and other adroit masters in the art of boxing's ballyhoo. The dazzling Damon and his astute confederates, the philosophic Mr. Farnsworth and the scholarly Mr. Corum—have persuaded Mr. Tunney to the point where he has promised to fight for that worthy milk charity if he ever returns to the gloved wars.

And that is good judgment again on the part of the highly intelligent Tunney. For Runyon & Co., are fast becoming the paramount promotional factors in New York City boxing. All their Milk Fund shows have been big successes fiscally and financially. While Madison Square Garden is teetering in the throes of business depression and matching in apititude—and Jimmy Johnston has been skimming what cream there is through featuring Primo Carnera—Runyon & Co., have lined up the pick of heavy talent—all the way from Champion Max Schmeling through Mickey Walker and other contenders for 1932's title event. And so, if Tunney decides to have another go at it, it will be for the Milk Fund.

Meanwhile, Jack Dempsey is howling "em over at a faster rate than even Benny Leonard and drawing, thus far, much bigger gates. He, too, is a good Milk Fund prospect for 1932. Time is steadily enhancing his fan popularity. That most marvelous of magnifying glasses—memory—makes the ol' Mauler more of a superman than ever and if his ringworn legs can carry him swiftly for three or four rounds, ringworms are legion who believe none can stand up against Dempsey that long.

If Tunney comes back, he and Jack could draw capacity almost anywhere, but this Sport Bug would would hate to keep counting (even like a Chicago referee) until Gene starts training again for a professional bout.

Too bad Leonard can't put on about forty pounds more of useful weight. What a match he'd make with Dempsey for... Father Time's world championship!!

couraged and aided to the fullest extent, because it makes for the up-building of our boys, both mentally and physically and it must always be appreciated that the boys of today will be the voters and representatives of their various communities in a few short years. Therefore, good healthy minded and healthy bodied boys cannot help but make healthy, clean and clear thinking men and citizens of the future.

Henry Palmer, of Langhorne, has the following to say: "Having followed the Boy Scout movement ever since it started in Bucks County and made a careful study of the work here and elsewhere, I believe it to be one of the very best movements being carried on. It makes for better boys and this means better men in the future."

James E. Groome, of Yardley: "I feel that to support the Boy Scout movement is to support the highest American ideals. It is my observation that wherever you find a true Scout you find a very high class of American citizen. In these days of delinquent children, we see so many temptations thrown around the boys and girls of our country, it behooves the older generation to provide such activities as the Boy Scout movement does provide to safeguard the youths from the dangers and temptations that confront them today."

Endorsement from E. E. Althouse, Sellersville, reads as follows: "I heartily approve the Boy Scout movement because I realize more than ever the need for character building among our youth. The world has forsaken the right home discipline that shaped the lives of our good old fathers. Modern devices for entertainment are attracting our children. The influence of the home, the church and the school are often discounted by new standards too often founded upon false conceptions of a wholesome life. The Scout idea is to restore that orderliness of ideals which builds character. The the Shenango and Beaver Valley Conservation Association since 1912. We must not forget Norman S. Powell, of Sharon, the engineer who saw Pymatuning's possibilities many years ago. We must remember the activities of E. C. Brown, of Pittsburgh, who as head of the Pymatuning Land Company purchased the necessary Ohio acreage.

"Pymatuning Reservoir will be a monument to those who dreamed this dream and made it come true. I am prouder than I can say that it was possible for me to aid them. Posterity will praise our accomplishment."

Governor Pinchot declared that the remaining balance of the funds appropriated for construction of the dam should be used in site clearing work, road building and other projects which could aid in relieving the plight of the jobless. In this connection, he warned:

"If legal minds decide that the appropriation act's phraseology restricts use of the money, I shall recommend that during its forthcoming special session the Legislature pass an act which will enable the State to furnish the work this money will provide."

The full text of Governor Pinchot's speech follows:

"Every human accomplishment had its beginning in a dream, and since that is true of what is to be known as Pymatuning Reservoir. Since the creation of the Shenango and Beaver Valley Conservation Association nearly twenty years ago men with a vision have worked tirelessly to make their dream come true. A number of these workers have passed on, and the fruits of their labors will be enjoyed by others. Good work in a good cause was their reward."

"Within a short time the ground on which we now stand will be covered by one of the two largest bodies of water in Pennsylvania. Wallenpaupack is the other. Pymatuning Reservoir will be eleven times the size of Conneaut Lake, once our largest lake. Seventeen miles long and with an average width of a mile and a half, Pymatuning will be comparable in size with New York's Chautauque Lake."

"For years I have been familiar with this project—first as a member of the State's Water Supply Commission, which approved its feasibility and recommended its construction. During my first term as Governor I inspected the reservoir basin from Jamestown to Linesville, and as a result of what I saw I approved legislation which permitted substantial progress, although at that time the State's funds were so low that additional appropriations were impossible."

"When I became Governor last January I recommended an appropriation of one million five hundred thousand dollars. The Legislature agreed with me that it was absolutely necessary, and in April I signed the bill which made the money available. Since then the Water and Power Resources Board has made steady progress with design and plans for the dam and spillway. Today's meeting is evidence of the great work accomplished by Chairman Staley, Chief Engineer Ryder, and their aides."

"Right here I want to say that the contractor's bid on this project was a source of much gratification to all of us. It was hundreds of thousands of dollars less than the engineers anticipated. I hope that the balance of the appropriation can be used to clear the site, to build roads and do other necessary work, and, if that is so, many additional men can be given jobs."

"Pymatuning, in addition to all the rest, is one of the State's contributions to the solution of the unemployment problem. Work is the sort of 'dole' good men appreciate. But if legal minds decide that the appropriation act's phraseology restricts use of the money, I shall recommend that during its forthcoming special session the Legislature pass an act which will enable the State to furnish the work this money will provide.

"It is most fitting that representatives of the State of Ohio are with us here today and I greet them warmly. Six thousand acres of the basin area lie in that State. Industries of the Shenango and Beaver Valleys purchased the flowage rights. The State of Pennsylvania will clear the site and construct the roads on the Ohio side of the basin, and the people of that State will share with us the benefits which are expected to accrue."

"And benefits there will be. This magnificent body of water will be a paradise for tourists and sportsmen. Fish in its waters, birds in its marshes, will make many a man wish he were here when his work keeps him away."

"Pymatuning, as its greatest contribution, will improve health and stream conditions in Beaver and Shenango Valleys. The primary purpose of the dam, of course, is to increase and improve the flow of water. The present low summer flow of the Shenango River (I have seen it when it could hardly be called a river at all) will be increased twenty times, and an adequate water supply will be provided for industrial and domestic purposes."

"Regulated stream-flow is the key to flood control. The high waters of 1913 caused a loss of more than two million dollars in the Beaver and Shenango Valleys. I am told that had Pymatuning then existed the flood height would have been reduced twenty-five percent, and damage would have been slight."

"Periodical floods in American streams have been steadily increasing in number, but I am glad to say the completion of this project will minimize the danger in your valleys. And here we shall have an opportunity actually to learn the benefits which follow the construction of impounding reservoirs.

"No community can progress either in industry or in population beyond the limits of the water available. When this dam is completed, and when the stream-flow increases, new industries will come to these valleys, because they will be assured at all times of an adequate water supply. This reservoir, therefore, is not only the State's contribution to the present emergency, but to the future of this region. It is a contribution to the prosperity, the happiness, and contentment of your people."

"As I said at the beginning, all human accomplishments began with a dream, and that is true of Pymatuning Reservoir. We must not forget the part taken in this project by such men as F. W. Walker, of Beaver Falls, president of the Shenango and Beaver Valley Conservation Association since 1912. We must not forget Norman S. Powell, of Sharon, the engineer who saw Pymatuning's possibilities many years ago. We must remember the activities of E. C. Brown, of Pittsburgh, who as head of the Pymatuning Land Company purchased the necessary Ohio acreage."
